MRAC has helped expand the Metropolitan Regional Arts Council’s funding support from $15,000 to $20,000 per year, which includes support for artists with disabilities. This expansion has allowed MRAC to offer additional support to artists with disabilities, who are often overlooked in funding for arts organizations.

MRAC has made important strides in recent years to address systemic racism and support BIPOC artists, including through grants of $5,000 or less to artists with disabilities. This support has enabled artists to focus on their creative work and develop new projects.

MRAC has also provided $10,000 grants to artists with disabilities and those who identify as BIPOC. These grants have allowed artists to take creative risks and explore new ideas, while also ensuring that their work is recognized and appreciated.

MRAC is committed to supporting artists with disabilities and BIPOC artists, and we look forward to seeing the continued growth and development of the arts community in the region.
